DOCUMENTRY
THE WAITING

synopsis

"The Waiting" portrays, as a game of mirrors, the lives of immigrant women artists that have been living in Madrid and how they have reinvented themselves through art, to put into question the dichotomies that constrain them: we/the others, reality/truth, simulation/real, material/ immaterial, local/international, western/non-western. We try to share and disseminate the multiculturalism in our country, thus supporting the life projects and work of these people, and by improving the degree of closeness and understanding between them.

descriptive memory

The invisibility of immigrant women artists within the art circuit is almost a truism, however it is an issue that has had very little attention from the "official culture".

The concern over this issue arose out of the necessity to give a voice to immigrant women artists within the Spanish culture. In order to do this, it is necessary to enter their life stories, to let their vital experiences function as a mirror game, so that each reflection glimpse the path of an artist: their creative work, adaptation (or not) to other customs, meetings with their fellow countrymen; sometimes, the natives' contempt or the stumbled integration; always, the pervasive sense of rootlessness; and at the same time the illusion of a new life.

The movie "The Waiting" is not intended as a common denominator to understand "what it means to be an immigrant woman", but to accommodate a series of concrete expressions about women that reflect about their cultural heritage through art and visual media, to contrast these with that of other women, other men, other people and thus enrich themselves with everyday knowledge. They seek, through the artistic fact, their particularly diaspora space, where they can survive.

Approaching the art produced by women of different nationalities, we can go beyond the absorbed prejudices, on both the art of other cultures and on their ways of behavior.

In a globalized planet, the "exiles" have become "world citizens". Labels are not useful anymore. Now people migrate for work, to live the European experience or for sheer laziness. The city comes through the work of the artists that welcomes.

Rikako Yano

Rikako Yano, has a diploma by the "Ikenobo" school of Kyoto in Japan, one of the oldest in the country and founder of Ikebana art, and since 1991 is a founding member of the Ikebana Association of Spain and of the Ikebana Internacional Castellana. Also she directs and teaches at the Ikenobo School of Madrid and at the Center of Japanese Art and Culture.

The latter, created by her in 1998, is dedicated to the teaching and dissemination of traditional Japanese arts: Ikebana, Shodo (Japanese calligraphy art), the tea ceremony (named Sado), the decoration of dried flowers, the collection of kimonos and Japanese language classes complete the cultural offer of this institution. Coupled with his teaching, Professor Yano has collaborated and participated in various exhibitions and demonstrations.

Mariella Köhn

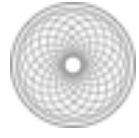

Mariella Köhn was born in Lima-Peru in a family closely linked to music. Her first album was released in 1993 and it was Merengue album. It was recorded in the Dominican Republic with Juan Luis Guerra's producer.

In early 1999 she brought together a group of excellent Latin-American musicians and created QUITIPL@S. With this group she develops musically all the richness of black-culture sounds, extinct in some countries but alive in others, to recover songs, cries and tools, and to find the similarity and joy of Latin American black people.

Mariella has been living in Madrid for 20 years and in 2001 she was appointed Academic of Music, as a member of number, by the Academy of Sciences and Arts of Music from Spain. Her outreach work has led her to present her performance Mariella Sings and Tells around the world, where she shows the evolution of music and life of black-people in Latin America, from colonial times to the present day, on a tour of the different styles of Afro-Peruvian music.

Two years ago the record 'Sí canto landó' was released, which provided new features such as the merger of Landó and Tanguillo Flamenco and rescued the sounds of antiphonal singing and major African percussion. Teaches musicology at the University Complutense of Madrid, being her show 'Mariella Tells and Sings' the area where she combines her vocations of research, teaching and singing.
